

Kim D. Moore, Ed.D.

Biography (Short)

Dr. Kim Moore is a certified John C. Maxwell coach, speaker and trainer. Kim is passionate about equipping aspiring, emerging and experienced leaders to expand their influence, lead with confidence and achieve significance.

For 30 years, as a military officer, educational leader, adjunct professor, cancer survivor and leadership coach, Kim has been at the forefront of equipping others to maximize their potential. Her philosophy is simple: All people are leaders—from the stay-at-home mom raising children, to the store clerk representing a franchise, to the CEO of a Fortune 500 company. The only question is this: How effective are they?

The seeds of leadership were planted in the U.S. military. As a Company Commander and Training Officer, Kim led hundreds of soldiers and staff. She also instructed all branches of the military in preparedness for nuclear, biological and chemical warfare (NBC), including weapons of mass destruction (WMD). This experience required a level of training, coaching and drive unlike any Kim had known while growing up in small-town Chester, Pennsylvania. She has held onto those skills, carrying them into her subsequent career in education as a high school teacher and administrator for our nation's eighth largest school district. Kim has also taught business courses as an adjunct professor for the largest for-profit university in the United States.

As Kim's career progressed and shifted, she has learned yet another key aspect of leadership: balance. Now, with each new venture or training opportunity, her goal is to "add value" to others' lives, empowering them to solve problems, weigh priorities, reach their potential—and have some fun, too. It starts with recognizing the leader in us all.
